

— A QUICK ORIENTATION

Working together, simply.

A short, brand-styled template you can drop any public-facing content into — briefs, guides, proposals or client notes. Replace the copy; the styling looks after itself.

— WHAT THIS TEMPLATE GIVES YOU

The building blocks below are the same ones used across Fiddlie's public-facing documents. Each is a single command, so a document stays readable in source and consistent in print.

01

A branded cover

- A full-bleed tricolour bar along the top edge
- The fiddlie. wordmark with a right-aligned metadata block
- A two-tone display title and an optional lead paragraph

02

Eyebrow labels

- Use `\eyebrow{...}` to introduce a section in letterspaced blue caps
- The same treatment appears above the cover title via `\kicker{}`

03

Numbered cards

- `\card{Heading}` draws the chip and heading you see here
- Numbering is automatic; pass `\card[A]{...}` to set a label, or `\card*{...}` to reuse the current number

04

Blue-dot lists

- Ordinary `itemize` lists pick up the brand bullet automatically
- Inline emphasis works exactly as usual

Write ordinary LaTeX.

There is no special body layout to learn. Headings, paragraphs and lists all inherit the brand styling, so you can focus on the content.

Section headings

Use `\section{...}` for big display headings — they accept `\accentword{}` for a two-tone effect. Use `\subsection{...}` for the compact bold lead-ins that sit above a short run of bullets, like this one.

Two-tone accents

- `\accentword{word}` colours a word in brand blue
- `\accentword[brandpink]{word}` uses pink
- `\accentword[brandyellow]{word}` uses yellow

Footer and metadata

Every page carries the document reference — `\documentId{}` with the revision, or the build ID when it's unset — bottom-left, and a zero-padded 01 / 02 page indicator square in the bottom-right corner. The cover's metadata block is driven by `\doctype{}`, `\revision{}`, `\docyear{}` and `\website{}`.

Swap in your own content and the document stays on-brand — predictable structure, so the writing has room to breathe.
